Day 3: Monday, June 14

- Take-Two Interactive hosted an important panel on diversity, equity and inclusion that tackled many of the very real issues facing the video game industry today.

Before I give my grade of Day 3, I have to discuss the biggest elephant in the room at E3 2021. And that was the Take-Two Interactive E3 Showcase being used not to talk about new updates for Borderlands 3, NBA 2K22 or Tiny Tina's Wonderlands or any other new 2K games. No, we just suddenly out of nowhere get a massive and long overdue Gaming Industry Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Panel hosted by Toni Ligon, director of diversity and inclusion at 2K. The all-star DEI panelists included: Gordon Bellamy, professor of the Practice of Cinematic Arts at USC, head of the USC Games Bridge incubator, and CEO of Gay Gaming Professionals; Jim Huntley, professor and head of marketing at the University of Southern California, executive producer for USC Games Expo, and one of the people behind the Gerald A. Lawson Endowment Fund ; Susanna Pollack, president of non-profit organization Games For Change, which pursues real-world impact through games and Laila Shabir, founder of Girls Make Games, which organizes workshops designed to inspire the next generation of women in games. This controversial DEI panel suddenly disrupted E3 2021.

This excellent and highly accomplished panel of diverse gaming professionals must have been hidden on the early E3 2021 press releases either intentionally or unintentionally. I am going to assume the former because everyone watching the first session of Day 3 of E3 2021 on Twitch or YouTube had no idea this panel was replacing or substituting the normal and predictable, flashy 2K game demos, trailers or announcements. E3 even had a diversity chat room and I seriously doubt anyone was posting or hyping up this DEI panel on Day 1, Day 2 or early morning on Day 3. There wasn't advance Tweets of the 2K DEI panel on the E3's Twitter page and there was definitely no description of this DEI panel on E3's agenda page. So, this was either a 2K decision, ESA decision or a joint 2K and ESA decision to blindside the E3 2021 virtual viewers by giving them a timely discussion on the importance of the gaming industry promoting, supporting and funding diversity, equity and inclusion. This DEI discussion is much overdue in the wake of the recent Riot Games and Ubisoft toxic "frat boy" culture debacle and the well investigated, highly outrageous, and disturbing racist and sexist Activision/Blizzard Entertainment Civil Rights And Equal Pay Complaint that was released after E3 2021. No one can doubt the real need for DEI in gaming.

Hello Blizzard -

I personally have a lot of emotions coming out of yesterday, and I know you do, too. The allegations and the hurt current and former employees are extremely troubling.

I know many of you would like to receive more clarity. While I can't comment on the specifics of the case as it's an open investigation, what I can say is that the behavior detailed in the allegations is completely unacceptable.

- It goes - with saying - it is completely unacceptable for anyone in the company to face discrimination or harassment.
- It goes - with saying - that everyone should feel safe working here, whether we are on campus, at BlizzardCon, or working from home.
- It goes - with saying - it takes courage to come forward, and all claims brought to the company are investigated by internal and (when needed) external investigators. We take these claims very seriously. Claims can be made without fear of retaliation, and many times, I attend to them personally, along with our other leaders.

Stepping back - when I talked with Bobby about taking this job, one of the first things I mentioned was a revered saint of the Brack household - Gloria Steinem. Growing up, the value of women as equals, understanding the work that had been done for equal treatment, and the fact that there was still much to do, were common themes. This is just one of the reasons why the fight for equality is incredibly important to me. People with different backgrounds, views, and experiences are essential for Blizzard, our teams, and our player community. I disdain "bro culture," and have spent my career fighting against it.

Iterating on our culture with the same intensity that we bring to our games is imperative, with our values acting as our north star. This is some of the most important work we do, both as professionals and human beings.

A company is more than a legal construct that exists as a piece of paper in a filing cabinet in Delaware. The people that work at the company make it what it is, through their actions and creations. Each of us plays a role in maintaining a place of safety for one another. And it is also up to each of us to continue to craft the Blizzard we want - and commit to doing our part in keeping Blizzard great but always aspiring for more.

The leadership team and I will be meeting with many of you to answer questions and discuss how we can move forward. In the meantime, I want you to know that you can talk to any manager, any HR partner, any member of the legal team, or to any one on the executive team (including, how??). If you feel more comfortable talking to someone outside of Blizzard, or prefer to be anonymous, you can contact the Way2Play Integrity Line.

I feel angry, sad, and a host of other emotions, but I also feel grateful to work alongside a set of leaders and thousands of employees who join me in their commitment to continuous improvement.

Thank you Blizzard.

JAB

“Uhm, whenever you may be on your path as a GBTQ person or an ally. Right. Because I think that’s all that we’ve all discovered. And I think, uhm, whatever population you are part of, whether it be across gender or race or expression identity. Is that you don’t have to be a member to care. Okay? You don’t gotta be a member to say this is an important issue. And in fact, a lot of the work that we do at a corporate level is saying, ‘Hey, you don’t have to do all the work. You don’t have to push the rock that’s sitting on you. We’re going to help you push that rock that’s on you. It’s not on me, but I can push. Right. Cause I can see it. It’s on you.’ And, so, I’m asking these questions. Uhm, corporate supports time. Right? Time, talent and treasure” ...Gordon Bellamy, GGP, E3 2021 2K DEI Panel, 6/14/2021

“Oh, so, I mean to add to that. I think the, uhm, something that a few of us have touched on earlier is. Uhm, an old ad adage from, from the business world, ‘You can’t manage what you can’t measure.’ Uhm, if you don’t have a way to see how your progress is, is evolving over a continuum. You kind of just go, ‘Well, I think something’s working. Let’s just keep doing that’. And business people, me myself being one of them don’t respond well to that. It’s just that, ‘Okay, let’s just keep investing in a thing, but I don’t know the results of.’ We need to be able to go back and say, ‘Hey, this year we were here, this following year, we were here.’...The positive feedback is to be able to say, ‘Here’s data that shows that what we’re doing is having an impact on our objectives and rewarding that partner or those partners for that investment of that support.’ That’s really key to building a positive feedback loop around, investing in diversity equity inclusion.”...Jim Huntley, executive producer for USC Games Expo, E3 2021 2K DEI Panel, 6/14/2021

“So, the first camp in 2014, we literally like marched into a Maker Faire with flyers, just going around and being like, ‘You look like you would love video games. Cause you’re playing with the robots right now, come back to camp.’ But I think it’s, um, it’s pretty much primarily been word of mouth originally. Bhut then when we ended up partnering with the game studios and game companies that really helped elevate, uhm, the program and the PR. I think Susanna touched on that. It’s like it actually legitimized us and then kind of made us really cool. Like, ‘Hey, you can go make games at, you know, these game studios and actually make a name at Xbox. PlayStation, Nintendo. Take-Two. You can go into their offices meet the developers and make new teams. And I think that cool factor has kind of really helped us out when it comes to speakers and people who want to mentor and be involved that’s been a lot easier.”...Laila Shabir, GMG, E3 2021 2K DEI Panel, 6/14/2021

So, the E3 2021 2K DEI Panel was greatly needed and I have to assume much appreciated by Black, Hispanic, AAPI, POC, LGBTQ, indigenous gamers, game students, developers. All the 2K DEI panelists are all doing exemplary efforts to make the gaming industry a more welcoming social and accommodating space for all who want to earn a living making unique indie, mobile or console games.

But what I question is, why was such an important topic like DEI in gaming, not openly and widely promoted by 2K and ESA months, weeks or days ago leading up to the start of E3 2021? And maybe the move to hide or obscure the fact that the 2K E3 2021 showcase, which was the first major publisher session of Day 3, was not going to feature any cool 2K game clips helped get a larger audience to watch the 2K DEI panel instead of them ignoring it or watching Loki until it was over? Also, I can't skip the most perplexing fact when I was watching the Twitch live stream of the 2K E3 DEI panel. And that was the barrage of sleeping, tired and boring emojis while DEI panelists were talking. There was a fast and furious backlash of E3 2021 viewers who thought they had been ambushed and tricked into talking about diversity, equity and inclusion. And I think by not widely alerting everyone who was intensely or vaguely interested in E3 2021 that this major DEI discussion was happening on Day 3 it did not help alert many Black, Hispanic, AAPI, POC, LGBTQ, indigenous gamers, game developers and professionals to tune in to support and learn from the E3 2021 2K DEI panel.

What I would have preferred that Take-Two Interactive at E3 2021 do is show trailers or demos of their upcoming 2021/2022 games, and then do something really radical by having E3 2021 viewers see clips of 2K Games' non-white male staff, writers, designers, composers, producers or artists, that worked on those same new 2K game titles. That way the random E3 2021 viewers or hardcore 2K game enthusiasts, who were breaking their hands posting sleeping emojis and boring DEI memes, might discover that 2K Games' most profitable and popular franchises have lots of diverse creators and contributors. Sometimes you have to show many vocal and passionate gamers, who might deny the existence of racism, sexism and toxic "frat boy" culture in the highest, middle and lowest levels of the gaming biz, that they have nothing to fear and only something to gain by DEI. I am certain 2K was serious about supporting diversity, equity and inclusion at E3 2021 because they gave a sizeable donation to USC Interactive Media & Games' Gerald A. Lawson Endowment Fund for Black and Indigenous Students. But I seriously doubt Take-Two Interactive is going to use their possible and expensive 2K presentation time at Gamescom 2021 to repeat having a secret DEI panel. Nope! Gamescom 2021 is virtual again this year, but it is far too important for any Triple-A publisher to waste that opportunity not promoting their best games to millions of global gamers and the media. E3 is now a poor man's Gamescom.

Accessibility in Gaming panel addressed gaming for people with disabilities, with voices from Able Gamers, TRIPP and Ubisoft.

E3 2021 Day 3 - GRADE: C

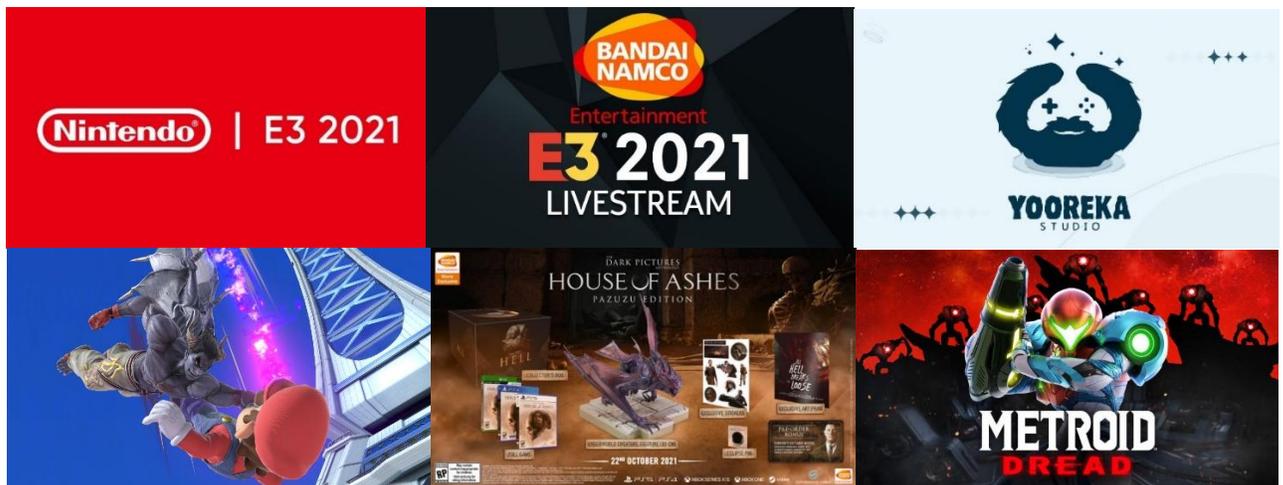

I am giving Day 3 a Grade of C which might sound highly surprising because the morning started out with the 2K DEI Panel. My primary reason for the Grade of C is because the sudden 2K DEI Panel was forced upon the E3 2021 virtual viewers. That chaotic decision just showed why E3 has become less about premiering breakout and awesome new Triple-A and indie games, but whatever a publisher, developer or other gaming entity wants to showcase at the moment.

And before 2K's DEI Panel, there was a well-produced presentation by Verizon promoting its new advancements in its 5G network that will expand and enhance game developers and gamers with low latency, faster game uploads and truly real-time immersive experiences. Verizon also announced a major diversity initiative by launching their Verizon Game Forward Scholarship for female students at HBCUs and by providing new tech centers on those Black campuses. Verizon also had 5G endorsers like Aerial Powers, member of the Minnesota Lynx and streamer with Team Liquid, Anna Donlon, Executive Producer of Valorant with Riot Games, artStar, Content Creator for Dignitas, Derwin James, safety for the LA Chargers and Madden NFL player, EMUHLEET, Pro Gamer for Dignitas. Overall 5G will be a huge benefit to the gaming biz.

Intellivision was hoping for an 80's nostalgia branding miracle to get anyone under 35 watching their E3 2021 presentation to actually want their new family friendly and tepid Amico gaming system instead of waiting a few more months for Valve's Steam Deck. Amico should concentrate on doing a deal with Roblox, so its games could come from the Roblox community and gain instant popularity. Also, some impatient Twitch E3 2021 viewers after the 2K's DEI Panel may have been on edge waiting for Mythical Games to finish hyping up NFTs in their cute Blankos Block Party Showcase. The Indie Games Showcase and Freedom Games Showcase did have some truly interesting, unique and amusing indie games worth playing and buying on Steam. And Capcom smartly highlighted some of its best game franchises The Great Ace Attorney Chronicles, Resident Evil Village and Monster Hunter. But my C Grade of Day 3 is justified because the Razer Showcase/Infomercial after Capcom was slow, technical and boring.

Day 4: Tuesday, June 15

Players will alternate between Emma's top-down view and Fenton's horizontal side-scroller view, using the former's lantern to cast shadows the teddy bear can cross. Intelligent obstacles and clever gameplay mechanics will force players to constantly remain on their toes.

“Uhm, so that’s one thing like both from the consumer and players and developers’ perspective, like if there’s a business, you see so many innovative games come out and like kinder, uh, just more fun games coming from the West. That people in Southeast Asia or any other region that doesn't have the similar access, they do also have those ideas, but they're not exposed to funding over extremities. There not exposed to the right people. And Twitter does help, but at the same time you have to have a strong heart and thick skin to delay get to a point you feel like you deserve it”...Gwen Foster, Technical Director, Soup Pot, Chikon Club, Gamespot & The Mix, E3 2021 Play For All Showcase, 6/15/2021

“And what are the challenges day-to-day that people might not know because they just see a game that looks cool and it's like, oh, one person development team, what is the true human cost of a one person development team”?...Tamoor Hussain, Managing Editor, Gamespot, E3 2021 Play For All Showcase, 6/15/2021

“It's a blessing and a curse because on one hand. Like I pretty much been able to do exactly what I wanted to do with this game. Uhm, and I'm like a weird guy with like a lot of like weird ideas. Uhm, so let's just kinda like do that like unfiltered and just like, do me. Where normally in like a bigger development team. It'd be like, you know, it had to be like pass, like, you know, X amount of approvals. Get past the marketing department. You know, all this stuff. Uhm, so having that freedom has been like super liberating. It's a little lonely sometimes. Uhm, but it is fun, and I would, there's very few things I'd rather want to be doing right now. Uhm, so I'm very thankful for it, but also I'm very, very tired.”...Davionne Gooden, Indie Game Developer, She Dreams Elsewhere, Studio Zevere, E3 2021 Play For All, 6/15/2021

So, you kind of described yourself as a BIPOC [Black Indigenous People Of Color] studio. Can you talk a little bit about what that means and also what impact that has on Onsen Master as you created it?...Tamoor Hussain, Play For All, 6/15/2021

One of the things that I didn't necessarily have growing up were games that included characters that were, that were black and brown, it was always interacting with a protagonist that didn't necessarily look like me. And, so, I would love to add into the games that are now being represented in media that do have people that look like us. Uhm, and be a part of that space...Derrick Fields, Onsen Master, WakingOni Games, E3 2021 Play For All, 6/15/2021

Do you think we're getting better? Do you think it's kind of being led by the industry in the indies in the industry?...Tamoor Hussain, Play For All, 6/15/2021

Uhm, yes. And yes. I think things are absolutely getting better. I think there are certainly more games out there that are including people that look like, uhm, that look like each of us having this conversation now...Uhm, I think absolutely indie games are championing this inclusion and this representation that needs to be seen across the industry as a whole. And because of that, there are certainly more kind of Triple-A level games that are including more, uhm, BIPOC characters and some very notable games too. And, so, I hope. I, you know, uhm, optimistic me. I don't want that to stop. I want to see more. I want it to continue happening...Derrick Fields, Onsen Master, WakingOni Games, E3 2021 Play For All, 6/15/2021

Through the gameplay through the narrative and through our audio layers, we are delivering the same sense of freedom of expression. And, uhm, critically feeling bad ass even if you're just sitting in your room in your underwear...I was going to say, when you're talking to people who don't understand like a song like "F-The Police", isn't like, 'Hey, we're going to Jack up the police'. It is an expression of, I cannot do anything against this overwhelming fascist force...But I can rap and you're going to hear every amount of this, this justified fury and rage expressed, uhm, through music...Xalavier Nelson, Indie Game Developer, El Paso, Everywhere, Strange Scaffold, E3 2021 Play For All, 6/15/2021

E3 2021 Day 4 - GRADE: B

For me I was actually happy E3 2021 had come to an end. It is all consuming as being press for E3 to watch and take notes on all the nonstop game demos, game trailers, updates, presentations, interviews and Triple-A and indie showcases. I mean even the last Day 4 started at 9:00 am with Nintendo and the Official E3 2021 Awards Show started around 4:45 pm. That is a long, long damn day of E3 programs with no breaks in the middle. It is easy to get cynical and burnout waiting for just two or three Triple-A publisher showcases like Nintendo and BADA I NAMCO to justify sitting for hours supporting an all-virtual E3. What didn't happen at E3 2021 was being overwhelmed with hours and hours of awesome, cutting edge and mind blowing exclusive Triple-A and indie game premieres and demo footage like what will happen during Gamescom 2021.

I do want to single out Gamespot & The Mix Play For All Showcase that was hosted by Tamoor Hussain and Justin Woodward. This showcase was, to me, the best example of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion at E3 2021 because it featured three BIPOC and one AAPI female indie game developers talking about the challenges of creating their games as well as the topic of DEI in the gaming industry. Also, Saverio Caporusso, the only white male indie developer during Play For All, was also unique because his indie game Blind Fate: Edo no Yami lets one play a disabled character. But overall, I think E3 will have a hard time coming back as a live event in 2022 because Gamescom is just so much better.
